Autush Footprints.—We are reminded by a single glance about us that the glory of summer has passed away, and that the beautiful greenness of the season has fled; that

"The melancholy d-ys are come, The sadness of the year, Of wailing winds and maked woods,

And meadows brown and sear. Headed in the hollow of the grove,

The withered leaves lie dead, They rustle to the edving gust And to the rabbits tread." Were this all; were there "no associations of moral desolation of faded hopes, of hearts withering in the bosom of the living, connected with the decaying scenery around us, we would not indulge in a moment's melancholy. The season of flowers will come again; the steamer will flow gracefully and lightly as before; the trees will again toss their cumbrous load of greenness to the sunlight; and, by mossy stone and winding riv-ulet, young blossoms will start up, as at the Hay and Platform bidding for their fairy guardians.
